Dear Jean,
on Monday December 7, I woke up thinking about you (as usual) and of what I could do for your birthday that would be different from the usual material stuff. I got the idea to make the creative juices flow and create a professional website for you.

I had two options: use a website builder, like I did for Languesol and pay hefty fees each year or I could try to find a more cost-effective alternative. I chose the latter and went ahead and purchased a domain name for you (I might have faked your identity hihhi) and I created a first site here. However, I didn't like it one bit. My babe, deserves something eloquent and sophisticated and the template wouldn't allow me to do what I would like.

So, I spent 24-48 hours learning how to code, so that I could build you this site.

I am sorry for the times I looked a mess when you video-called.

I combed through your linkedin, academia, research gate profiles and picked a few photos of yours to use on the site. Do you recognize this photo? You sent it to me the same day I started this adventure, when you were on your morning walk in Manchester.

Anyway babe, here is your very own WEB PROPERTY and I am happy to have been able to do this for your birthday. An unusual gift, I know; but knowing that I was doing it for you encouraged me to do a good job. Now that you know about it, can you please give me the info I need to populate the website even further? lol

I love you baby and Happy 31st birthday.

Oh, by the way, there's more :-P.

Love, Rho
